AN ACT to amend the New York state urban development corporation act, in relation to creating a waterfront revitalization demonstration program

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, REPRESENTED IN SENATE AND ASSEMBLY, DO ENACT AS FOLLOWS:

Section 1. Statement of legislative intent. Many of New York state's oldest cities, towns and villages owe their very existence to an advantageous location on the state's vast network of natural and man-made waterways and waterfronts. From the earliest years of settlement through the early years of the twentieth century, these municipalities depended on their waterfronts as the focal points for commerce, industry, recreation and, in many instances, transportation. New York state emerged as the empire state in the nineteenth century when its waterfront-based manufacturing industry enabled it to become the dominant manufacturing center of the world. In recent times, however, a variety of factors have contributed to the decline and deterioration of the state's once vital waterfronts, including the erosion of the state's manufacturing base, the abandonment of aging structures, and the construction of highways and rail lines which often cut off cities, towns and villages from the waterfronts which once were the center of municipal attention.

The potential of such waterfronts to contribute to the revitalization of these older communities and to improve the quality of life for their residents remains despite these years of neglect. The improvement of these waterfronts can result in the revitalization of adjacent central business districts, the attraction of new commerce and industry, the enhancement of tourist opportunities, new recreational opportunities and the reclamation of our historic heritage. Conversely, continued deterioration can lead to the spreading of economic blight.

EXPLANATION--Matter in ITALICS (underscored) is new; matter in brackets [ ] is old law to be omitted.

LBD07935-01-1

Therefore, the legislature declares that the revitalization of the state's historic waterfronts will contribute to the economic and social vitality of waterfront communities and that state assistance in this regard is necessary and proper for achieving this public purpose.
