S 2. Legislative intent. The legislature hereby finds and declares that in cases of battered spouse syndrome the abuse sometimes moves from the spouse to the children. Once the abusive spouse begins to over-discipline the children, they will often use threats or the removal of the children by child protective services as a means to compel subjugation from the non-abusive spouse. In addition, the abusive spouse prevents the reporting of such incidents to child protective services by making the non-abusive spouse an accomplice in this abuse. Under this threat, children are subjected to escalating abuse that could have been prevented if the non-abusive spouse had a safe harbor to report such abuse at the early stages without fear of losing their children. By this act the legislature intends to take such tool away from the abusive spouse by providing the non-abusive spouse a way to report such incidents without fear of having their children removed from their custody.

The sequence of events above are an apt description of "Melinda".

Melinda is a woman suffering from battered women's syndrome. She has been abused by her husband over a twenty year period. The abuse had been verbal, psychological, and physical. She has taken the abuse in the belief that her children needed a father.

Recently the abuse has been transferred to the children. It started with excessive spanking, locking a young teenager in the basement, and pushing a five year old to the ground.

Melinda confronted her husband and put herself between her husband and her children resulting in a black-eye (to Melinda).

27 She told her husband that she would not let him hit the children and 28 would call the police and have him arrested.

EXPLANATION--Matter in ITALICS (underscored) is new; matter in brackets [] is old law to be omitted.

S. 7429 2

 Her husband responded that if she called the police, her children would be taken away from her by Child Protective Services.

The husband recently graduated to hitting his teenage son with a wooden rod leaving welts.

The abuse in this cycle of domestic violence is escalated over time when the abuser believes that the non-abusive parent or caretaker is afraid to report such abuse, under the fear of losing their children.

- By creating a safe harbor under Melinda's Law we have the opportunity to prevent the escalation of abuse to both the spouse victim and the children who are the victims of domestic violence.
