AN ACT to establish a temporary state commission, within the office for the prevention of domestic violence, to study intimate partner violence; and providing for the repeal of such provisions upon expiration thereof

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, REPRESENTED IN SENATE AND ASSEMBLY, DO ENACT AS FOLLOWS:

1     Section 1. Legislative findings and intent. The legislature hereby
2 finds that intimate partner violence against women is a major public
3 health concern that needs to be addressed with all practical and prag-
4 matic tools at its disposal and that those tools should be effectively
5 and responsibly utilized by communities all across the state.
6     According to the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA),
7 1.5 million women are physically and/or sexually abused by an intimate 8 partner each year, and 25% will experience intimate partner violence at 9 some time during their lifetimes. Moreover, 25% of adolescents have 10 experienced physical or sexual dating violence. In another report, the 11 U.S. Department of Justice found out that females are approximately ten 12 times more likely to be killed by an intimate partner than are males.
13     Similarly, injuries that result from such violence are significantly
14 more common among females for both adolescents and adult populations,
15 and approximately 10% of intentional injuries to adolescent girls are 16 reported to be the result of violent male dating. External factors such 17 as race, age, illiteracy and ethnicity are closely related with the 18 climbing rates of intimate partner violence. Furthermore, health risks
19 and demographics have been found to be associated with both dating
20 violence variables and health risk outcomes.

Research suggests that the incidence of physical dating violence was associated with substance use (heavy smoking, binge drinking, driving after drinking, cocaine use), unhealthy weight control (diet pills use, laxative use), risky sexual behavior (first intercourse before the age of fifteen years, not using a condom at last intercourse, at least three sex partners in the last three months), pregnancy, and suicidality (considered, attempted suicide).

A study found that many secondary effects are commonly related with the prevalence of intimate partner violence. For example, both adolescent girls and adult women who experienced forcible sex are more likely to exhibit eating disorders; also, violent childhood experiences catalyze the vulnerability to become victims of intimate partner violence. Likewise, the humiliation of those who experienced intimate partner violence may play a major role in predisposing teens to suicidal ideation and behavior. Moreover, based on recent data from abused adults, adolescents who experience dating violence may be less likely than others to receive treatment for mental health concerns.

Adolescents experiencing dating violence are at significantly elevated risks for having greater numbers of sex partners, making them more vulnerable to contracting HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases than adolescent girls who are not abused by dating partners. Similarly, abused high school girls are found to be more likely than their non-abused peers to have ever been pregnant. In contrast, younger girls were found to be at lower risk for experiences of dating violence, due to reduced opportunity for such experiences.

Evidently, the legislature needs to address this issue thoroughly due to the disturbing statistics that show an increasing rate of adolescent dating violence. Bearing in mind that the state's population is composed mainly of minority groups, and that for example, according to JAMA, black female students appear to be more likely than individuals from other groups to report sexual violence in the absence of physical violence from dating partners, it is imperative to formulate legislation that would study this issue properly and then make necessary recommendations that would lead to minimizing this problem.

As noted, it is relevant to make a relationship between dating violence and health risks among, but not limited to, adolescent girls in the state of New York. Health experts agree that perhaps the most pressing need for research involves the development of this violent behavior among perpetrators of abuse against dating partners. Prevention efforts in this area should be expanded and support should be provided for development and implementation of prevention programs and services specific to teen dating violence. Equally important, is the finding of this legislature that medical and mental health professionals should routinely screen adolescents for dating violence and be aware of appropriate referrals.

It is the finding of this legislature that a body of experts in this area be convened to report and recommend solutions to intimate partner violence that can be quickly implemented throughout the state.

S 2. A temporary state commission on intimate partner violence is hereby established, within the office for the prevention of domestic violence, to examine, evaluate and make recommendations concerning the prevalence, causes, effects, risks and costs to the state of intimate partner violence, including dating violence toward young women.
