6 that while religious and independent school students are included in an 7 array of state and federal programs intended to benefit students in all 8 schools including, but not limited to, instructional materials, school 9 health and safety measures, academic intervention, professional develop-10 ment and transportation services, the administration of those programs 11 falls most often to the public school districts in which such religious 12 or independent schools are located or the school districts in which such 13 religious and independent school students reside. The legislature also 14 recognizes the substantial administrative burden placed on public school 15 districts charged with administering services for students over whom 16 such districts have little direct responsibility. The legislature 17 further recognizes the inefficiencies that exist in administering 18 programs to benefit students attending religious and independent 19 schools. Therefore, the legislature recognizes the need to create the 20 state office for religious and independent schools for the purpose of
