- 4. Delivery of information. The prosecutor shall disclose to the defendant and make available for inspection, examination, photocopying, copying, print out, retrieval, testing, or interview (for statements previously made but not recorded in writing or mechanically) or by any other method of access, all information including but not limited to that in property, documents, reports, recordings, videos, records, in the knowledge of a person but not recorded (all hereinafter called information) which would provide the information set out in subdivisions one, two, and three of this section regardless of whether such information would itself constitute admissible evidence at trial or is otherwise known to the defendant.
- 5. Continuing obligation. If at any time after the time periods set forth above the prosecutor learns of additional information required to be disclosed to the defendant pursuant to subdivisions one, two and three of this section, the prosecutor shall, pursuant to the continuing obligation to deliver to the defense the information required by subdivisions one, two and three of this section, promptly notify the defendant and the court of the existence of such information and expeditiously make such items available to the defendant for inspection, photocopying, copying, testing or other reproduction as set out in subdivision four of this section.
- 6. Application to the court. (a) The prosecutor may seek a protective order based on a reasonable showing that a witness or other person would be endangered by disclosure of the information required by this section. If the court finds that the prosecutor has made a reasonable showing that a witness or other person would be endangered by disclosure, the court shall conduct an in camera review of the claim, and, if appropriate, redact the information given to the defense until such time as the law or other circumstances of the case require disclosure of the information.
- (b) If in the circumstances of a case, the prosecutor, at any time, asserts that information was not delivered or was delivered late or is not exculpatory within the terms of this statute or as required by the state or United States constitutions and was not delivered based on that reason, the court shall make an independent evaluation and determination, after hearing from defense counsel, as to whether the information should be delivered pursuant to this subdivision.
- (c) The prosecutor's view of whether the information is truthful or accurate shall not be a factor used by the prosecutor or the court to determine whether the information must be delivered to the defense pursuant to this section.
- 7. Inquiries. Prior to the required dates for the disclosure of information to the defense, the prosecutor shall make inquiries to learn 51 whether those agencies deemed by law to be assisting the prosecutor are in possession of information defined in subdivisions one, two, and three this section, and shall obtain the information for delivery to the 54 defense in accord with this section.

shall hold a conference to determine whether the prosecutor has examined the prosecutor's file and the files of those assisting the prosecutor and has delivered the required information.

- (b) If the prosecutor delivers to the defense pursuant to this statute large quantities of information, whether of documents, electronic information, or other format, without identification of its significance to the case, the court shall establish in the conference the procedure for identification of the information and if needed grant an adjournment for that to be accomplished by the prosecutor and examined by the defense.
- 9. Sanctions for late delivery or failure to deliver information defined in this section. Where there is a failure by the prosecutor to deliver the information set out in this section, or the information is delivered after the required time period, at the request of the defense or in the court's discretion, the court shall order one or more of the following sanctions:
- (a) grant an appropriate extension of time in the proceeding to allow the defense to examine the information and to investigate based on the late delivered information. For that effort, the court may authorize for the defense investigators, lab tests, experts and other resources to conduct the defense investigation;
 - (b) reopen a pre-trial hearing;
 - (c) preclude introduction of evidence;
 - (d) instruct the jury that the prosecutor has not delivered or delivered only after improper delay evidence that should have been delivered and delivered timely and that the jurors may infer that the information not disclosed was exculpatory or, if not disclosed or disclosed only after undue delay, could have led to exculpatory information as defined in subdivisions one, two and three of this section;
 - (e) notify the supervising prosecutor;
- (f) refer the matter to the appropriate attorney disciplinary committee pursuant to subdivision ten of this section if after conducting such inquiry as the court deems appropriate and issuing an opinion stating the court's findings, the attorney's conduct is asserted to be improper under the rules of professional conduct.
- 10. Lawyer sanctions. (a) Any judicial opinion which concludes that there was an intentional or reckless failure to comply with this section by a prosecutor shall be forwarded by the clerk of the court in which the opinion is filed to the attorney disciplinary committee with jurisdiction.
- (b) If in connection with the obligation to deliver information set out in this section or the state and United States constitutions, a trial or appellate court has concluded that in the course of a criminal proceeding, a prosecutor has violated rules 3.4(a)(1), 3.4(a)(3) or 3.8(b) of the rules of professional conduct, or other relevant statutes and rules, by intentionally or recklessly failing to deliver or timely deliver to the defense the information set out in this section, the conduct shall be referred by the judge pursuant to rule 100.3(D)(2) of the code of judicial conduct to the attorney disciplinary committee of the appropriate judicial district for proceedings pursuant to applicable rules.
