§ 2. Legislative findings and intent. The therapeutic benefits of time spent outdoors is clinically proven and is known to help reduce stress, improve concentration, and promote overall well-being, both physical and mental. Outdoor-based therapeutic programs hold particular promise for people suffering from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, Military Sexual Trauma, Traumatic Brain Injury, and Substance Use Disorders. Outdoor programs including adventure therapy, wilderness therapy, horticultural therapy, walk-and-talk therapy, and other nature-based programs, are currently being used by mental health professionals and are shown to have benefits including reduction of stress, restoration of attention, and an improved sense of well-being. New York state is home to natural beauty from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean, and has a significant amount of open space, including the Adirondack and Catskill parks. Recognizing the healing benefits of outdoor-based therapeutic programs
