WHEREAS, In times of freedom, Africans began to realize a new life in these foreign countries, and over time, African populations grew; and

WHEREAS, Today, the current African diaspora is happily living in the Americas and other parts of the world, and have maintained and passed down many of their traditions as a way to preserve their heritage; Africans always try their best to introduce these traditions to the world by showcasing their native culture even while residing abroad; and

WHEREAS, People of African descent can be found all around the world, although some people may not primarily identify themselves as being African; the African diaspora consists of people in Europe, America, Asia, and everywhere in between; most Africans are proud of their heritage and background and when asked, would quickly say their origin country in Africa as their home; and

WHEREAS, The African Diaspora is a perfect example of the strength and resilience of the African nation; from a dark past, Africans have turned this negative situation into one of new opportunity, and as the African diaspora continues to grow, this national pride will be found in even more places around the world; now, therefore, be it
