1 Cooperative and condominium housing constitutes a significant portion 2 of New York state's residential housing stock. It is and has been the 3 public policy of this state to encourage such forms of home ownership. A 4 wide variety of laws have been enacted to provide fairness in the 5 conversion of rental properties to cooperative and condominium ownership
6 and in the regulation and taxation of cooperatives and condominiums.
7 State and local laws and regulations are also designed to ensure that 8 the residents of such housing are provided with safe and habitable
9 accommodations.

10 Inevitably, disputes have arisen among cooperative and condominium
11 sponsors and developers, cooperative shareholders and condominium unit 12 owners, prospective shareholders and unit owners, boards of directors
13 and boards of managers. Such disputes often result in lengthy and costly 14 litigation and uncertainty as to the rights of the parties pending the 15 outcome of litigation. Such litigation diverts resources that could be 16 better utilized to provide affordable and well-maintained buildings and 17 grounds for the common good of the owners.

18 This article is necessary to provide a neutral, informative and acces-
19 sible resource available to all parties involved in residential cooper-
20 ative and condominium ownership and governance. The ombudsman appointed 21 pursuant to this article will conduct outreach programs to educate unit 22 owners and board members as to their legal rights and responsibilities.
23 The ombudsman will encourage alternative dispute resolution when 24 disputes do arise. The ombudsman will be available to provide dispute 25 resolution services on consent of the parties. The ombudsman will also 26 provide monitoring and supervision of cooperative and condominium 27 elections.
