AN ACT to amend the agriculture and markets law, in relation to developing a database for missing domestic animals

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Section 16 of the agriculture and markets law is amended by adding a new subdivision 52 to read as follows:

52. (a) Develop and maintain a searchable database of lost and found domestic animals. An email or telephone number shall be provided on the website to allow an individual who has lost or found a domestic animal to contact the department. The information to be entered into the database shall be the type of animal; the animal's name; an identification number, if available; a photo of the animal; and the county where the animal was lost or found. The individual's contact information shall be kept within the department and not made available on the website. The database shall be searchable by county and type of animal and shall have a section to allow for other pertinent information that may assist with finding the animal. The department shall update the website upon receiving information from the public. Any information entered into the database shall be maintained for a period of three years.

(b) The website shall also provide the following information to assist owners searching for lost or missing animals:

"There are several things to remember when you lose a pet:

1. Act fast.

2. Call for them while checking areas in the home where they may be trapped.

EXPLANATION--Matter in italics (underscored) is new; matter in brackets [-] is old law to be omitted.

3. Scent is key; the pet's favorite food and dirty laundry left at the doorway can be helpful.

4. Search the neighborhood several times; ask neighbors, letter carriers and any delivery people you may see.

5. Lost pet signs; put them everywhere.

6. Use social media in addition to the New York state missing pet database.

7. Contact local animal shelters and animal control agencies.

8. Be wary of pet recovery scams. A few ways to recognize the lost pets scam are; if they demand you wire money, they refuse to meet in person, or they will meet but find an excuse why you should pay them before actually seeing the animal. To avoid being scammed, never wire money, do not ask leading questions, make them provide the description, and if you are absolutely confident the person has your pet, arrange to meet in a public place. If you find a missing pet and someone contacts you claiming to be the pet's owner, you must verify their claim. Vet records, breeding papers, even family photos are all viable ways to prove ownership. These tips are by no means an exhaustive list. There are many resources available to assist you from being scammed.

9. Don't give up.

Animals have been reunited with their owners after having been missing for months. Make sure your pet always wears a collar and an ID tag, or has a microchip."

§ 2. This act shall take effect on the one hundred eightieth day after it shall have become a law.
