Introduced by Sens. SALAZAR, BRISPORT, HOYLMAN, JACKSON, SEPULVEDA -- read twice and ordered printed, and when printed to be committed to the Committee on New York City Education

AN ACT to amend the education law, in relation to admission to the specialized high schools in the city of New York

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Legislative findings. Since the enactment of the Hecht-Calandra Act in 1971, the New York city school district has not been able to make decisions about admissions to its specialized high schools. Instead, as a result of the Hecht-Calandra Act, the city school district has been required to base admission decisions to its specialized high schools on only one criterion for admission - a student's performance on a single standardized exam. As a result of the use of this criterion, known as the specialized high school admissions test (SHSAT), the student population of the specialized high schools does not reflect the diversity of the City's population. Whereas the overall percentage of Black and Latino students in the city's public schools is approximately sixty-seven percent, Black and Latino students only represent nine percent of the population of the specialized schools. This disparity hurts Black and Latino students and it also harms the students who attend the specialized high schools, who do not reap the intellectual, emotional and social benefits from learning in a more diverse environment. Furthermore, the city school district is alone in its reliance on a single metric to make admission decisions. Universities across the country consider multiple factors when selecting their incoming student body; selective institutions do not rely on the results of a single exam. It is time for the city school district to follow suit and for admissions to no longer be based on the procedures prescribed in the Hecht-Calandra Act. This legislation will allow the city school district to develop its own admissions criteria for specialized high schools, as
