IN ASSEMBLY

January 6, 2026

Introduced by M. of A. ROZIC -- read once and referred to the Committee on Consumer Affairs and Protection

AN ACT to amend a chapter of the laws of 2025 amending the general business law and the mental hygiene law relating to requiring warning labels on addictive social media platforms, as proposed in legislative bills numbers S. 4505 and A. 5346, in relation to the legislative intent and the effectiveness thereof; to amend the general business law, in relation to warning labels on addictive feature platforms; and to repeal section 7.48 of the mental hygiene law relating to addictive social media platform warning labels

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

1 Section 1. Section 1 of a chapter of the laws of 2025 amending the 2 general business law and the mental hygiene law relating to requiring 3 warning labels on addictive social media platforms, as proposed in 4 legislative bills numbers S. 4505 and A. 5346, is amended to read as 5 follows:
6 Section 1. Legislative intent. On June 17th, 2024, US Surgeon General
7 Vivek H. Murthy called for warning labels on social media platforms due 8 to the "significant mental health harms" such platforms pose to young 9 users. The Surgeon General had previously found, in a landmark public 10 health advisory issued a year prior, that adolescents aged 12 - 15 who 11 spend more than three hours a day on social media faced double their 12 risk of anxiety and depression - yet as of summer 2023, average daily
13 use for this cohort was 4.8 hours. The Surgeon General further found 14 that social media companies were exploiting young users at one of the 15 most vulnerable periods of their lives, while their "identities and 16 self-worth are still forming," and they are "especially susceptible to 17 social pressures, peer opinions, and peer comparison." The Surgeon
18 General found that frequent social media use is associated with distinct 19 changes in the amygdala of the brain, which regulates emotional learn-20 ing, as well as its prefrontal cortex, which regulates impulse control 21 and moderates social behavior.

Research shows that social media exposure overstimulates reward centers, creating pathways comparable to those of an individual experiencing substance use or gambling addictions - findings further bolstered by endless national surveys wherein teenage respondents report feeling "addicted" to social media platforms and describe the difficulties they encounter when they try to limit their use. Leaked internal memos from major social media platforms ~~[such as Meta, Google, and TikTok]~~ reveal that such companies have deployed the use of predatory features such as algorithmic feeds, endless scroll, autoplay, notifications, and "likes" to produce dopamine loops, drawing inspiration from the "variable reinforcement schedules" produced by gambling slot machines that keep users pulling the lever, or in this case, checking their screens, at periodic intervals for an outcome that could be intrinsically rewarding. Beyond the oft-cited side effects of depression, anxiety, and body dysmorphia, leaked company documents reveal that social media companies knew that compulsive use of their products was also associated with "loss of analytical skills, memory formation, contextual thinking, conversational depth, (and) empathy." Social media use is also associated with sleep disturbance, ~~[wherein spirals of insomnia and negative social comparisons reinforce and enhance each other in a vicious loop]~~ which can also lead to poor health outcomes.

The cumulative impact of these addictive design features, created for no other reason than to keep a user hooked to a platform for as long as possible, on youth mental health has been nothing short of devastating: today, nearly half of adolescents say social media makes them feel worse about their bodies. Teens with the very highest levels of social media use are twice as likely as those with low levels of use to rate their mental health as poor or very poor. From 2008 to 2015, the percentage of hospital visits among young users for suicidal ideation and attempts nearly doubled. The impact has been particularly acute amongst adolescent girls, as between 2011 and 2018, self-poisonings among 10- to 12-year-old girls quadrupled, hospital admissions for self-harm among 10- to 14-year-old girls tripled, major depressive episodes among 12- to 17-year-old girls increased 52%, and suicide among 10- to 14-year-old girls doubled. Among female adolescent users, the association between poor mental health and social media use is now stronger than the associations between poor mental health and binge drinking, obesity, or hard drug use. The US Surgeon General characterizes the current youth mental crisis as nothing less than a public health emergency.

The legislature therefore finds that requiring social media apps with certain particularly noxious design features to display warning labels to ~~[all] users [at the point of user access, which will aim to communicate the latest peer-reviewed research on the impact of social media on mental health,~~ is a reasonable and necessary step to take for consumer health and safety. ~~[These warning labels would be similar to those that the government has already instituted for similarly high-risk products, such as labels that warn that tobacco products cause cancer, or that drinking alcohol during pregnancy may lead to birth defects.]~~

§ 2. The article heading and sections 1520, 1521, 1522, 1523, 1524, 1525, and 1526 of the general business law, as added by a chapter of the laws of 2025 amending the general business law and the mental hygiene law relating to requiring warning labels on addictive social media platforms, as proposed in legislative bills numbers S. 4505 and A. 5346, are amended to read as follows:
