§ 103. Future editions and supplements of official compilations. 1. In any year the secretary of state may, whenever he shall believe that the public interest will be served thereby, cause a new edition of such official compilation or any volume thereof to be published, which compilation shall be published as soon as practicable, and shall set forth the codes, rules and regulations except such as relate solely to the organization or internal management of a department, board, bureau, authority, commission or other agency of the state on file in the office of the department of state on the date as of which such new edition is published.

2. The secretary of state may, whenever he deems it to be necessary, cause to be published an official supplement to the official compilation, showing all new and all changes in existing codes, rules and regulations adopted since the effective date of the codes, rules and regulations embraced in the latest edition of the official compilation or since the end of the period covered by the preceding supplement.

3. Any new edition of such compilation published as heretofore provided, and any supplementation thereof or thereto, shall presumptively establish that the codes, rules and regulations contained therein are on file in the department of state, and are effective, unless otherwise stated, on the date as of which such new edition, or any volume thereof, or a supplementation thereto, is published.

4. Any code, rule or regulation contained in any new edition of the official compilation, or any volume thereof, or any supplementation thereto, shall not be printed in any official supplement published for any period prior to the date as of which such new edition, volume, or supplementation is published.
